One 9-year-old boy described feeling so cold his "bones hurt." Teenage mothers said they were denied milk, diapers, and medicine for sick babies. A 17-year-old boy reported witnessing other children being tased as punishment. These allegations are just a handful of what's described in recent complaints obtained by VICE News and filed on behalf of thousands of migrant children detained last year by U.S. Customs and Border Protection, or CBP. The children's names have been withheld in the complaints because they fear retaliation for speaking out. The complaints, detailed here for the first time since being filed on April 6, allege migrant children in CBP custody are routinely denied medical care, served rotten or inedible food, and abused verbally and physically. The complaints also allege CBP routinely violates a court order that's supposed to limit a kid's time in CBP custody to 72 hours; instead they're subjected to prolonged stays in frigid holding cells known as hieleras or ice boxes. The Biden administration has said it's preparing for another wave of migration with the pending rollback of Title 42, a Trump-era policy that has enabled border agents to turn away nearly everyone except unaccompanied children. While officials claim conditions are improving, the complaints paint a grim picture of what awaits those who attempt to cross, especially young people. "We expect now that Title 42 is going away, this is just going to worsen," said Carson Scott, an attorney with Immigrant Defenders Law Center. "Advocates have consistently been sounding the alarm bells. When we have waves of more children crossing the border, conditions get even worse."

Reuters: U.S.' Blinken, Mayorkas to meet Tuesday with Mexico foreign minister

U.S. Secretary of State Antony Blinken and Secretary of Homeland Security Alejandro Mayorkas will meet Tuesday with Mexico's Foreign Minister Marcelo Ebrard, the Mexican official said in a tweet

Monday afternoon. Ebrard also said he will have a meeting to discuss investments in Central America and Mexico's southern region.

(Cristiano Lima)

According to Homeland Security Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas, there's a lot of misinformation out there about the department's newly launched "Disinformation Governance Board." Since DHS announced the ominously named initiative last week, it has offered few details about the scope of its work and powers. Amid that informational void, Republicans and some civil society groups have bashed the effort as a potential vehicle for government censorship and a threat to free speech. House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) likened the group to the fictional "Ministry of Truth" propaganda agency from George Orwell's dystopian novel "1984." During a pair of television interviews on Sunday, Mayorkas cast those concerns as misplaced but said DHS should have defined the board's role more clearly. "Those criticisms are precisely the opposite of what this small working group within the Department of Homeland Security will do," Mayorkas told CNN. "I think we probably could have done a better job of communicating what it does and does not do." Mayorkas said that part of the group's mandate is "to ensure that the way in which we address threats ... [occurs without] infringing on free speech, protecting civil rights and civil liberties, the right of privacy." The agency initially said the board would focus on countering disinformation coming from Russia ahead of the midterm elections and from human smugglers targeting migrants on the U.S.-Mexico border. But it said relatively little about what exact function it would serve, and its critics on the right seized on the board's broad-sounding name to suggest something more nefarious was afoot.

Washington Post: Opinion: The Disinformation Governance Board is a bad name and a sillier idea (Eugene Robinson)

Nothing is more important to the future of our democracy than the fight against disinformation. But a new Department of Homeland Security unit — ominously called the Disinformation Governance Board — is not helping. To the contrary, it only promises to provide aid and comfort to the enemies of truth. DHS Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas should pull the plug on the new board. Like, yesterday. And never speak of it again. The problems begin with the worst name I've ever heard the federal government come up with, and that's saying something. Disinformation Governance Board? To call the unit's name Orwellian is an insult to George Orwell, who was a masterful prose stylist and who wrote a famous essay, "Politics and the English Language," railing against sins such as "staleness of imagery" and "lack of precision." I can see how disinformation requires monitoring. I can see how it requires fact-checking and refutation. But governance? How do you govern lies? Beyond the issue of the name is the still-mystifying question about what the board is supposed to do. At congressional hearings this past week, Mayorkas veered from pitching it as an effort to counteract Russian-style meddling in our elections to portraying it as an effort to protect Spanish-speaking migrants from lies told by the criminals who smuggle them into the country. He failed to make clear exactly how the board was supposed to accomplish either of these tasks. "I think we probably could have done a better job of communicating what it does and does not do," Mayorkas said Sunday on CNN.

The Hill: White House pledges DHS disinfo board will be 'nonpartisan and apolitical' (Morgan Chalfant)

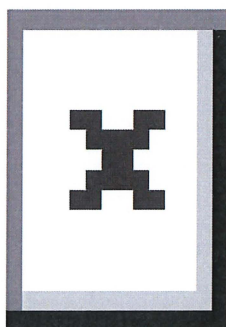

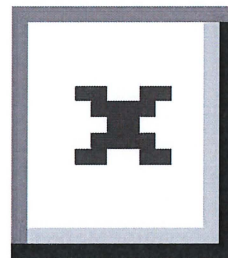

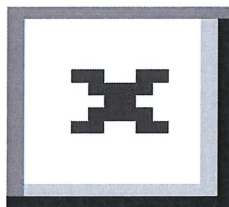

White House press secretary Jen Psaki said Monday that a board on disinformation recently convened by the Department of Homeland Security will operate "in a nonpartisan and apolitical manner." "The mandate is not to adjudicate what is true or false online or otherwise," Psaki told reporters during a briefing. "It will operate in a nonpartisan and apolitical manner. It's basically meant to coordinate a lot of the ongoing work that is happening ... and the focus is on disinformation and threats to the homeland." Psaki said that the board would address disinformation related to threats such as violent extremism, human trafficking and malign foreign influence. She also noted — as she did last week — that the work of the board started under former President Trump's administration in 2020. Republicans have attacked the board since its creation was disclosed last week, comparing the effort to the "Ministry of Truth" depicted in George Orwell's dystopian novel "1984." Some have also zeroed in on the board's executive director, Nina Jankowicz, suggesting that she can't be neutral because of tweets that she sent in 2020 regarding a New York Post story about a laptop purportedly belonging to President Biden's son Hunter Biden. Jankowicz, an expert in disinformation and eastern Europe, at the time amplified the opinion of national security experts that the laptop was part of a Russian influence operation. Publications including The Washington Post have since verified content on the laptop. Conservatives have also mocked Jankowicz over a TikTok video she made about disinformation. Psaki and other Biden officials have defended Jankowicz, describing her as highly qualified to lead the new Disinformation Governance Board.

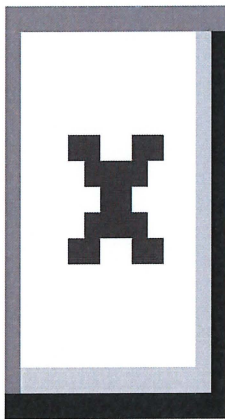

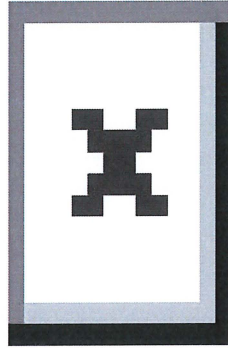

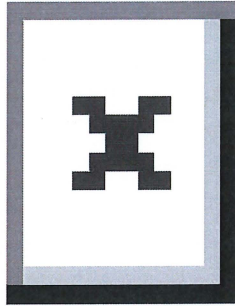

CNN: Biden administration defends disinformation board from fierce GOP criticism (Priscilla Alvarez and Sean Lyngaas)

The Department of Homeland Security and the White House are defending a new initiative to help target disinformation amid fierce criticism from Republicans who cast the effort as overreach and attacked its leader. Last week, DHS announced an interagency team, dubbed the "Disinformation Governance Board," to coordinate department activities related to disinformation aimed at the US population and infrastructure. Nina Jankowicz, a disinformation expert with experience working on Ukraine and Russia issues, was tapped to helm the board, along with two senior DHS officials, including acting Principal Deputy General Counsel Jen Daskal. [...] In a fact sheet released Monday afternoon, DHS said Mayorkas has asked department officials to enhance the public's trust in the group. Mayorkas has also asked the bipartisan Homeland Security Advisory Council to recommend ways DHS can address disinformation while "protecting free speech and other fundamental rights," according to the fact sheet. Jamie Gorelick -- the council's co-chair and a former US deputy attorney general -- will lead the effort along with Michael Chertoff, a member of the council who was secretary of Homeland Security under President George W. Bush.
